

CSS can help the same webpage looks different on different devices.

Tuesday, March 06, 2012 by Kanda P.

← Screenshot of my homepage (<http://kandaphati.webs.com>) as viewed on PC.

← Same webpage viewed on Iphone. The layout is also similar on Ipad.

Another example: My link page.

These two pages look the same on PC:
<http://kandaphati.webs.com/index2.htm>
 and
<http://kandaphati.webs.com/5/del.htm>

Below is the screenshot when viewed on PC.

You can see that the major font is Comic Sans MS.

However, it is a problem when viewed on Iphone, Ipad – and maybe on other mobile, too. See the screenshots.

I now understand why many web designers do not like Comic Sans MS!

When viewed on Iphone and Ipad, the page with the un-optimized codes is too difficult to read – even after enlarging it.

← The optimized page.

The lines are easier to read, but the length of each line still needs improving!

And this is where I found my inspiration:

How To Use CSS3 Media Queries To Create a Mobile Version of Your Website

<http://coding.smashingmagazine.com/2010/07/19/how-to-use-css3-media-queries-to-create-a-mobile-version-of-your-website/>

The most important part is:

@media only screen and (max-device-width:480px;) {

Just add the part to the last of the CSS, and put the desired CSS (for viewing on mobile) into the space between the `{` and `}`.

To test and edit, I uploaded the codes to a blank webpage at webs.com, and used my mobile to view it.

I might optimize a few more pages after this.
